

Drama and Theatre Acting Techniques

Learning objectives

1. To become aware of / develop a range of approaches to acting
2. To focus on truthfulness in all acting, as opposed to gimmicky, parody or short cuts
3. To consider how to create a character, and how to respond to the needs of a role / project
4. To explore the above through improvisation and text work

Some thoughts on the aims of the lesson:

The exercises tend towards a Stanislavskian approach, i.e. naturalistic, based on building a character. However, it may be interesting for more advanced students to challenge this notion by mentioning David Mamet's thoughts on Method Acting. He says that an actor does not need to know where they came from, or what they had for breakfast; they simply need to know the play and their lines, what their moves are, and to be good at acting! He likens acting in a play to a boxing match – you are in an arena, where you need to be fit and ready for the action. His thoughts concur with Noel Coward's maxim "Say your lines and don't bump into the furniture".

It is also interesting to consider the actor's varying approach to different projects – you always need to "know what play you are in". For example the needs of a comical multi-roling physical comedy will be different to an intense, claustrophobic naturalistic drama, or a play in which you have to create non-human characters. The key factor in all projects, regardless of what methodology you are following, is for the acting to be truthful.

True and False by David Mamet can be a useful Devil's Advocate tool for challenging / exploring established ideas.

Warm up - Acting Games

1. Keepy - uppy. The whole group is responsible for keeping a soft ball off the floor with volleyball hits. Alternative – throw up several balloons, don't let any of them hit the floor. Promotes fun, teamwork, and warms up body and voice
2. Hitch hiker. Four chairs set out as a car. One driver, one hitch hiker. The hitcher gets into the car in a specific "state" e.g. weeping, high on speed, paranoid, as a monkey etc. The driver takes on the state of the hitcher, mimicking it exactly, not adding to it or commenting on it, or creating a scene. The result is abstract, but involves complete
